

THE DISMISSAL of the two head Marshes from the Tewksbury management, and the undoubtedly forced resignation of Resident Physician Lathrop, are all acts confirmatory of Gov. Butler's charges, the testimony in support of which made it impossible to retain these men in the capacities which they have vacated. If Supt. Marsh was the good man that Lawyer Brown pretends to think he was, why didn't the State board give him a chance to file his bond for the year, which he had not done, just as it permitted Sanborn, Wrightington and others of the officials to qualify by taking the requisite oath, which they ought to have taken several months before? Evidently, it was because the State board and the party well knew that public opinion would not tolerate such a course, and that the Marshes and Lathrop "must go." They have gone now, by vote of a Republican board of government, who thus acknowledge that the Tewksbury management was unjustifiably bad, as Gov. Butler had claimed. It is therefore extremely silly for Republican journals to assert that Gov. Butler's witnesses have been proved to be liars, etc., that they "have borne false witness against the commonwealth," and that the Tewksbury management has been simply immaculate. Such silliness could arise only from despair and demoralization, like that into which the party has been thrown by Gov. Butler's exposure of its maladministration.
