

Strolling Trio Of Animals Find Flophouse Haven In Garage

Bull, Jackass And Sheep Wander In Town And Old Law Forces Official To Bed Them

TEWKSBURY, Mass., Dec. 30
(AP)—Three buddies with a penchant for the open road—a bull, a jackass and a sheep—hawahawed at the chairman of the Board of Selectmen yesterday and turned his garage into a flophouse for four-footed bums.

The strange trio — apparently headed from nowhere to nowhere — were found strolling abreast down the main highway by two patrolmen. They walked in a leisurely fashion, followed by Patrolmen John Sullivan and Eugene Manley in a squad car, for about an hour.

Near the center of town the wanderers left the road and evinced an interest in a lush greenhouse near the home of William B. Carter, chairman of the Board of Selectmen.

One of the officers remembered an old law requiring the selectmen to care for stray animals. Mr. Carter, roused from bed, sadly acknowledged his duty. He drove his car from his garage and hunted up some hay.

The jackass, the bull and the sheep were bedded down in new and, Mr. Carter hoped, temporary, quarters.
